Handbells come to Dillsburg

Jane Hostetter with bells.

The Calvary United Methodist Church in Dillsburg is pleased to announce a new ministry, the formation of a handbell choir program under the direction of Robert J. Miller.

During the late fall months a memorial fund drive was held. Generous donations made possible the purchase of a five octave set of Malmark handbells, three octaves of choir chimes, and all needed accessories. Inscriptions inside the handle of each bell give the names of fund donors and the ones honored by the gift.

An enthusiastic group of twenty-one prospective ringers has been rehearsing for some weeks on the choir chimes. With the recent delivery of the handbells the groups easily made the transition to the new medium.

The director, Robert J. Miller, moved to Dillsburg in October 1988 from Silver Spring, Maryland where he directed the Colesville Methodist Ringers for a dozen years. Christmas Eve recitals preceding the late candlelight service became a tradition that was a drawing card for the community. Spring concerts of secular and sacred music were also popular. Mr. Miller also directed the St. Paul Lutheran youth handbell choir for a year's term, substituting for a director on leave.

Mr. Miller received most of his handbell training through directors' workshops led by Donald E. Allured, former Professor of Handbells at Westminster Choir College, Princeton, New Jersey. Mr. Allured is one of the leading composers of handbell music, and has a full schedule of directing workshops and festivals across the country and abroad.

At Calvary United Methodist, Mr. Miller is pleased with the response from the congregation to the challenge of raising handbell funds and as the large group of ringers who have come forward. He anticipates enough ringers for two choirs, including young adults. Soon there will also be a children's choir. The recommended requirement for becoming a handbell ringer is an ability to read music, though that skill can be learned with determination. Dedication is imperative, a commitment to rehearsal time each week. Each ringer is responsible for a part of the "keyboard" so regular attendance is necessary. Handbell ringing is fun, and a comradeship quickly develops in a group working together to produce beautiful music.

The Rev. James T. Dawes, Pastor of Calvary United Methodist expresses joy at the new program. He invites community members who are searching for a church home to attend services at Calvary at 8:15 or 10:45 a.m., each Sunday with Sunday school classes at 9:30. Calvary offers a full program for all ages, and is known for its friendly people and its participation in projects in the community and beyond. More information can be obtained by calling the church office at 432-2113.
